This book started as a collection of documents dealing with the loss of freehold title by ten Aboriginal families in the 1950s at Eden Hill, and grew firstly with collection of material associated with neighbouring Success Hill and then Acts of the Western Australian Legislature that were racist; the legislation applied only to the race of people, the original owners of the land before British colonisation.

In an address to the Legislative Council in June 1837, Governor James Stirling referred, on two occasions, to invading the Swan River region. Many of the early colonists discovered the land was owned by Aboriginal people, and was forcibly taken away from them. Their reactions and records fill the pages of this book.

That Was My Home explores the hidden histories of the Noongar camps around Fremantle, Swanbourne and Shenton Park in the suburbs of Perth along the Swan River. The focus is the 1930s, 1940s and 1950s, a time when many Noongar people lived with their families in camps. The voices of Noongar people, juxtaposed with information from the archives, photographs and stories from others in the community, tell of life in the camps, work, cross-cultural tensions and friendships. Together they give a greater understanding of the shared histories of our suburbs. The author followed Aboriginal cultural protocols in obtaining permission to include stories, photos and other information.
