The Things That Matter Most by Gabbie Stroud. (2023)

The staff of St Margaret's Primary School are hanging by a thread with a litigation pending, the school due for registration, and a powerful journalist parent getting involved. The teachers are trying to be professional but they are unravelling personally. Tyson is fresh out of uni and nervous. Derek the Assistant Principal has dropped the ball on admin. Bev in the office has a health issue. Teacher Sally-Ann is desperate to get pregnant. Thank goodness for kids like Lionel who make teaching worthwhile. He's cheerful, likeable, helpful and devoted to his little sister. But he has a secret and as his future slides from vulnerable to dangerous, will someone realise before it's too late? As secrets threaten to be exposed and working demands increase, each staff member struggles to recall the things that matter most.

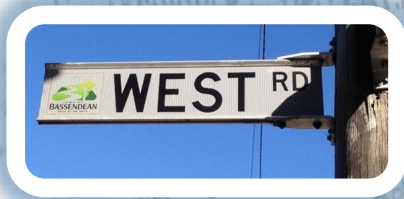

Every now and then you come across a story that deeply affects you while you read, a story that you know you won't forget and you won't hesitate to recommend. This is that book. I had this one on my to-be-read list for a few months before getting the opportunity to read it. My only regret is not picking it up sooner. The storyline really showcases the immense pressures that society places on teachers and school staff, the expectation that not only should they be providing an education but also closely watching out for children and families who might need help, all while planning lessons, completing paperwork, undertaking assessments etc... and you know, having their own personal lives and issues. This novel points out that in fact some children do fall through the cracks and that can potentially have horrific consequences, but school is only a part of the bigger picture in these cases. I thought this book was immensely powerful and thought-provoking. The writing is excellent and I genuinely cried at a particular point. Overall: a wonderful and competing heart-wrenching read, absolutely loved it.
